Is implying the same as saying?

Choose Your Words The speaker does the implying, and the listener does the inferring. Continue reading... The verb imply comes from a Latin word meaning "enfold or entangle" but has come to mean "to hint at." You might imply something that you don't want to outright say if you're feeling coy.

logic - Is implying the same as asserting?

1. This answer is not useful. Show activity on this post. I'd answer that with "No, it's not the same", but logic isn't the right tool to hit that with. I think the difference is the moral aspect that Michael mentioned. Merely implying something doesn't put the speaker in the open, standing behind the implication.
