Sometimes happen that people avoid saying the name of a hated or frightful animal and call them by a characteristic of it, an euphemism or an insult.

How commonplace is this Spanish pejorative term?

Zora and zorra are two different words. That a non-native-spanish-speaker might not easily hear the difference doesn't change that for native-speakers. There's no more danger here than naming your kid "Beach" or "Doug" and worrying that someone might turn it into b**** or dog. And for the record, I've never heard the word zorra used that way.
