What is considered a transvestite?

Magnus Hirschfeld coined the word transvestite in 1910 (from Latin trans-, "across, over" and vestitus, "dressed") to refer to the sexual interest in cross-dressing. He used it to describe persons who habitually and voluntarily wore clothes of the opposite sex.

What is a Transgender Individual?

Mary McMahon. Last Modified Date: November 21, 2020. A transgender individual is a person with a gender identity which is not consistent with his or her assigned gender; in a classic example, someone with the genetic makeup of a man may feel that she is truly a woman. A wide spectrum of people are transgendered, and there is some dispute as to when someone should be considered a transgender individual, and when another label might be more appropriate.

What is the Difference Between Transvestites and Transsexuals?

A transvestite is one who dresses the part of the opposite sex in order to receive some sort of sexual gratification. Cross-dressing is not done at all times. Typically, one will only do so to receive such gratification. Transvestites are (usually, and in the general sense being discussed here) are cisgendered.
